Edinburgh Printmakers

DELUGE

Curated by David Faithfull

24 October - 22 December 2018

Our relationship with water is universal and nowhere more so than here in Scotland. From the rains and mists that beat and shroud our landscape to the waves and storms that lash our shores, this elemental force is ingrained in our national character. Over the millennia, we have learnt to tame this life force in all its myriad of uses, re-directing it through pipes, drains, canals, industries and creative tributaries.

And nowhere is this watery spirit of enterprise, discovery and adventure more evident than through the eclectic work of the local, national and international printmakers who have beavered away on all the different presses in this building over the last thirty three years.

From its inception as a municipal washhouse through to its current purpose as the much-loved studio and galleries for Edinburgh Printmakers, water has been central to the building's activity and innovation. Through the initial laundry washes to the medium that is fundamental to lithography and screen-printing, it has permeated the building and the actions within its walls.

With their upcoming relocation to Fountainbridge by the Union Canal, another chapter of Edinburgh Printmakers' colourful and watery history draws to a close and a new one bursts forth. The DELUGE exhibition is the celebratory chapter of three decades of creative energy, industry and ingenuity at 23 Union Street before the exodus across town to Castle Mills.

Edinburgh Printmakers' members, past and present, were invited to consider water in all its manifestations, uses and symbolism. Responding to this aqueous element, in whatever form of their choosing; its Scottish flavour and water's universal power and symbolism.

The DELUGE exhibition catalogue is available to view on our website
